

Government Gets Money Back from Hotels

The government got back £74 million from companies running asylum hotels. This is small compared to the £2.1 billion total cost.

The Home Office wants to stop using hotels for asylum seekers and use cheaper places like military sites. They saved £700 million by doing this.

Some people say the government wasted money on these hotels. They want a strong plan to manage asylum accommodation better. The Home Secretary said.