

Families worry about epilepsy service

A service for people with epilepsy and learning disabilities in west Wales closed four years ago, making life hard and causing worry for families.

The Ombudsman said the health board did not plan well, causing upset. They didn't check patients' needs. The board said sorry and will improve.

Marie said the service was a lifeline. The health board is making a new plan to help people with learning disabilities get care.