

UK rugby teams have a salary cap to keep spending on players fair and the league balanced.

Saracens spent too much on players and were moved to a lower league. This shows why it's important to follow salary cap rules.

Andrew Rogers checks if rugby teams follow salary cap rules. He talks to people and checks data and contracts to ensure honesty.

Teams may hide extra payments. Rogers checks messages and emails to find them. This helps catch teams breaking rules.

Rogers learns from other sports to catch rule-breakers. They share ideas to keep rugby and other sports fair and honest for everyone.

Some teams, like Bath, are near the salary limit. Others spend less. Teams can move money but must follow rules. Rogers helps with these rules.

Rogers thinks rugby is fair with good rules and talking to teams. He watches for cheating so everyone can enjoy the sport honestly.