

Test cricket is a long, special game played for 148 years. Fewer people have watched it in the last 20 years.

T20 cricket is popular. Test cricket is costly as fewer people watch, making it hard for countries to earn money.

The World Test Championship is a contest to keep Test cricket fun. Teams play matches to earn points and win.

Ireland wants to join the WTC, but needs more money. They don't play Test cricket often.

Players earn more in short games like IPL. Some skip Test cricket. This is hard for countries with less money.

Some want Test cricket to be four days, not five. This may save money and keep fans interested.

Test cricket could invite countries like China or USA to play. This could help the game grow and make more money.

Sharing money from Test cricket can help all countries. Some countries earn a lot, others don't. Fair sharing can help everyone.

Test cricket is important and many people love it. It's seen as the true form of cricket. People are working hard to make sure it can continue.

Changes might be needed to keep Test cricket going. But it's important to remember why people love it and keep it special.