

New V-level Courses for Students

The UK will have new V-level courses for 16-year-olds, replacing some BTecs, to help students choose after GCSEs.

V-levels teach skills for jobs. Students can pick A-levels, T-levels, or apprenticeships. New help for maths and English instead of retaking GCSEs.

V-levels may not replace BTecs. The government is looking at university funding. Some universities worry about money as fees haven't risen with costs.
