

Bomb confession challenged in court.

Mas'ud was taken from home, away from family, and threatened. He had to learn a confession or face harm. He's worried about his family's safety.

Lawyers say the confession wasn't given freely. They want a judge to decide if it can be used in court. The trial is next year.