

Helping Families with Universal Credit

Universal Credit is money from the government for people who don't earn much or can't work. It includes a Child Element payment for up to two.

Scotland wants to help families with a payment. People had mixed views, some worried about costs and how it would work.

Some think payments help with food and school. Others worry it might cut other services or increase benefit reliance. Feedback aids Scottish plans.