

John lost part of his garden to a road project. He misses his oak tree and the bats that flew around it.

The Heads of the Valleys road took 23 years to upgrade. It's now open to make travel faster and easier for the local area.

John felt stressed because workers wanted to take part of his house. He refused to sell his home because it holds many memories.

Daryl's house has cracks from roadwork. He wants it fixed, not money.

Many trees and animals like bats were moved because of the road. But some people feel the government hasn't helped them enough with their homes.

The road is meant to bring new jobs and growth to the area. The Welsh government promises to help the local communities with future plans.