

Lab-grown food is being tested in space by the European Space Agency to see if it can be made for astronauts.

Astronauts eat light, long-lasting food. Sending food to space costs a lot. Growing food in space could be cheaper.

Frontier Space and Imperial College London want to make food in space. This could help humans live there and might involve space food factories.