

In Ballymena, Northern Ireland, 15 police officers were hurt after a protest. Some people threw petrol bombs and damaged homes and businesses.

MP Jim Allister said violence was wrong but blamed it on too many migrants. Claire Hanna said his words were not sincere and made things worse.

Police called the violence "racist thuggery." More officers will be in town. A man, 29, was charged, and two teens went to court for alleged assault.

Leaders say no to violence. They want calm words. The Justice Minister asks for peace and understanding in the community.