

The UK government is giving £15 billion to make travel better in England, helping trams, trains, and buses in the Midlands, the North, and the West Country.

Greater Manchester, West Midlands, and West Yorkshire will get billions for tram projects. Liverpool and the North East will also get money.

More money will go to places in the North and Midlands. The old rules were unfair and gave more to London. This change helps people living there.

Some people are happy about the money, but others worry. The government promises cheaper travel. More plans will be shared next week.
