

Spain's Prime Minister said sorry because his friend is in trouble for using public money wrongly. The friend left his job to prove he's not guilty.

Sánchez said he didn't know about the bad things. He promised to change leaders, no early elections, and asked for forgiveness for trusting Cerdán.

The Prime Minister has problems at work. His party lost the election, but he still leads. He said everyone makes mistakes and asked for understanding.