

Police dogs work hard and face danger. When they retire, they may have health problems. Thin Blue Paw wants them to get a pension for vet bills.

Some people adopt retired police dogs, but it costs more than regular dogs. Without help, these dogs might not find homes.

Some retired dogs, like Audi, are brave and save people. In Nottinghamshire, police give pensions to help with costs after dogs retire.

The Home Office says police manage dogs' retirement with help from charities and volunteers. There are no plans to change this support.
