

Olga Morozova won a tennis prize 50 years ago at Queen's Club. Now, the club has a women's event again with a new trophy.

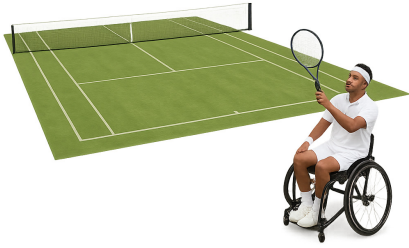

Morozova played tennis with wooden racquets and travelled by Tube. She won £1,000, which was a lot, but men got more. Prize money is bigger now.

In 1973, Billie Jean King helped start the WTA. Women earn more now, but not always equally. The LTA aims for equal prize money by 2029.

Morozova helped design a new trophy and will be celebrated at the tournament. She thinks the prize money is good but hopes it will get better.

Morozova praises Katie Boulter and Emma Raducanu. She thinks the women's event at Queen's will help British players on grass courts.

Top players will compete in the tournament. Queen's will honour Morozova for her past win. She feels happy and surprised by the attention.
