

The Chancellor talked about plans to improve transport in UK cities like Manchester and Liverpool, at a bus factory in Rochdale.

The government aims to make travel faster and easier, helping people get to work and school and supporting local shops and businesses.

Investment means spending money on new buses and trains. This creates jobs, homes, and helps people find work near home.

The government will spend money on transport across the UK, not just London, to make it stronger and fairer.

Better transport helps towns grow, people earn more money, and makes life better for everyone.

The government is working with local leaders to make these transport changes happen. They want to make sure local people have a say in what happens.

New trams and buses are planned for cities like Manchester, Liverpool, and Leeds to make travel easier.

The government wants to make more things in the UK, like steel, to keep jobs here.

The government promises to keep working on these plans. They want to make sure the UK is a great place to live and work.

The Chancellor says these changes will help everyone. They want people to feel the benefits of better transport and more jobs.

The government wants to make sure that all parts of the UK have the same chances to grow. This means investing in places that need it most.

The government is listening to what people want. They are making plans to help everyone, not just a few places.

The Chancellor finished by saying that this is just the start. There will be more plans to come that will help everyone in the UK.
