

Brian Wilson from The Beach Boys wrote famous songs like Surfin' USA and Good Vibrations. His music changed pop by adding new sounds.

Brian felt trapped and sad from fame and drugs. He stopped touring at 22 to write music.

Brian loved music from a young age. By age eight, he was good at the piano and sang with his brothers, making complex harmonies.

The Beach Boys were famous in the 1960s. They sang about surfing. Brian wrote many songs but didn't like performing live because it made him nervous.

Brian stopped touring in 1964 after a breakdown. He made Pet Sounds but got very ill while trying to make Smile.

In the 1990s, Brian felt better. He worked with new musicians, performed again, finished the Smile album, and played it live, making him very happy.

Brian made music that many people love. He faced challenges but his songs remain important. He passed away at 82, but his music is still loved.
