

Tottenham won the Europa League, their first trophy in 17 years, but manager Ange Postecoglou was still sacked, surprising many.

Spurs fans are upset because Daniel Levy, the chairman, seems to care more about business than winning.

Postecoglou felt proud to lead Spurs. He was the third manager to win a European trophy for the club, making history.

Some think Postecoglou should be sacked for a bad season. Others think he should stay. Football can be tough.

Some think football is about money, not trophies. Levy's choice shows this. Postecoglou lost his job even after winning, which some see as unfair.

Levy often sacks managers who don't win. Now, he sacked one who did. Postecoglou saw that winning isn't enough for Spurs.
