

Government to Rethink Pension Decision

The UK government may not give money to women born in the 1950s affected by state pension age changes. They said sorry for not telling them sooner.

A report suggested giving women money, but the government said no. The Waspi group wants £10,000 each and is taking legal action.

Women's pension age rose from 60 to 66, causing upset. The government is checking old papers but hasn't set a decision time.
