

A 200-year-old condom made from sheep's appendix is on show at the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam. It's part of an exhibit on 19th-century sex work and health.

The museum thinks the condom was a souvenir from a brothel. It has a funny picture and words making fun of a Greek story.

The museum is showing a print on a condom for the first time. The exhibition is open until November. There are also many other prints and photos.
