

Autism and Parkinson's Link

A study says people with autism might get Parkinson's more often. It looked at over two million people and found a link between the two conditions.

The study looked at Parkinson's before age 50. More research is needed. It's rare to get Parkinson's before 50.

Health services should watch autistic people closely. They may have other health issues and take many medicines.