

The US Open is at Oakmont Country Club, Pittsburgh. This golf course is very hard and tests players' skills and patience.

The course is tough with fast greens and tricky rough. Famous players find it hard. Few have finished with scores under par.

The course was made by Henry Clay Fownes in the early 1900s. It's long with many bunkers, making it hard to play.

This year, the weather has been wet. The grass is thicker. The course might be easier, but it's still a big challenge for golfers.

The 'Church Pews' bunker is very long and wide. It is a hard part of the course for players who hit the ball there.

To win at Oakmont, stay calm and play smart. This helps you handle stress and have a better chance to win.
