

Ed Miliband said the winter fuel payment will be given to more pensioners again after being stopped last year to help the economy.

Last year, only some pensioners got help. This winter, nine million pensioners with less money will get it. The government says it's in the Budget.

Some people think the money should help poorer families. The government says it won't borrow more money because the economy is getting better.

The government says the payment will be easy to get. Pensioners can say no to it. Some think it won't help families with children who need it most.
