

The Cornwall coast path from St Agnes to the Tamar at Cremyll is now better for walking. It's part of a plan for a long trail around England.

The new path is near the sea. People can walk by the water. The path can move if the coast changes to stay safe and open.

You can see towns like Falmouth and Penzance, Land's End, castles, old mines, and lots of wildlife on the walk.

Natural England moved the path closer to the sea. It's safer, has better views, and is easier to walk on.

The King Charles III England Coast Path will be the longest coastal walk. It gives new rights to walk on beaches and cliffs and can change with the coast.

Natural England cares for nature and wildlife in England. They protect National Parks and help farmers with the land.

The South West Coast Path Association helps keep the path nice. You can support them to keep it open for everyone.
