

Changes to Benefits in the UK

Labour MPs are unhappy about a new plan for Universal Credit and Personal Independence Payment. They want more support for people who can work.

The plan might make more people poor, even kids. It could be hard for people with mental health issues. The Prime Minister says changes are needed.

Some people think changes are too harsh. They say the government isn't listening to people with disabilities and want more details before voting.