

New NHS Rules for Safer Care

Oliver McGowan had autism and epilepsy. He died after a drug made his brain swell. His parents say doctors didn't understand his needs.

The government made new rules to keep people with learning disabilities and autism safe. This is called the Oliver McGowan Code of Practice.

Staff will get better training. This helps people with learning disabilities get better care. Mencap says it will improve how people are treated.