

A hospital and a staff member were found guilty of not keeping a young woman safe. Alice Figueiredo, 22, was in a mental health unit when she died in.

The court said the hospital and manager did not stop Alice from getting hurt. Her family warned about dangers, but no one listened.

Alice's family said she was smart and funny. She was sad since she was a teen and had eating problems. They wanted the hospital to improve care.

Some people in mental health care are not looked after well. Campaigners want a better system. Alice's family wants justice and safety for others.

The hospital was not charged with corporate manslaughter. People will watch this case to learn how to improve mental health care.
