

A Strawberry Moon will be seen tonight. It's the lowest since 2006 and won't be this low again until 2043 due to a major lunar standstill.

The Moon will look big and low. Clear skies in England and Scotland. Clouds might block the view in Northern Ireland and other areas.

The Strawberry Moon is named for strawberry picking time. It looks red because of its position, not its name. You can see it on other nights too.
