

Three Māori MPs in New Zealand were banned for doing a haka in parliament. They protested a bill about the country's founding treaty.

The bill to change the treaty with Māori was voted down. Some said it would split the country. The Māori Party, with six seats, protested loudly.

The haka is a dance from New Zealand. A protest video of it went viral. It may have scared MPs. Many protested outside parliament against a bill.