

New rules stop people being rude to emergency workers in homes. This keeps police, fire, and ambulance workers safer from racial abuse.

The law now protects against abuse at home too. Being mean to emergency workers because of race or religion can lead to 2 years in prison.

Emergency workers are brave and must be safe. Being mean to them is not okay. The government wants to protect them.