

A report says Engineering Biology can help solve problems like making lab-grown blood and new materials for clothes.

Engineering Biology uses science to help health, environment, farming, and energy. The government is investing £100 million to support it.

The report talks about using tiny things to make clean fuel and better crops. It wants to inspire the UK to try these new ideas.