

A teacher lost her job after students found her OnlyFans page. She used a different name but didn't hide her real job well, upsetting many.

The teaching council said she didn't act right. She left in December 2022, needed more money, and tried other jobs before OnlyFans.

The head teacher said pupils could see her social media. The school was upset and had other problems, making it hard to help pupils.

Ms Buchan earned more online than teaching. The council said she mixed personal and work life too much, so she can't teach for two years.

The council said teachers should follow rules and not harm their school's name. They want teachers to be good role models for young people.
