

New Training for GPs on Disabilities

New rules for training doctors and carers about learning disability and autism aim to prevent health problems. It's named after Oliver McGowan.

Staff must learn about learning disabilities and autism with people who have these needs. This helps give better care and stops health problems.

Paula and Tom worked hard for training to help people with learning disabilities and autism get better care. The Government and NHS support this.