

The UK plans to spend more on the NHS, schools, defence, and build roads and railways.

The government will borrow money and save in other areas. Some projects might not get money. They want to help the economy and improve life.

Police want more money. The government decides how to spend it. They also plan to help pensioners and give free school meals to more children.

Some people want the government to spend more on social care or trade with Europe. The government is trying to balance spending and saving.