

Protest at Climate Talks in Brazil

Protesters entered COP30 in Brazil but were stopped. They were from indigenous and political groups upset about environmental damage.

The talks are in Belém, near the Amazon. Indigenous groups there worry about climate change and deforestation harming their land.

COP30 has people from 200 countries talking about how to protect the environment and stop climate change.