

The Health Secretary plans to improve the NHS with a 10 Year Plan, adding more money and new ideas.

The NHS has cut waiting lists and has more GPs. The Secretary is happy and wants to keep improving. More money will help with tech and mental health.

The NHS wants new ways to work. They plan to use local care and digital services more, not just spend more money.

Local NHS teams will have more power and listen to patients more. There will be fewer rules, and good teams will get more freedom and rewards.

The Secretary wants to help poorer areas get good care. They plan to use money wisely to avoid waste in the NHS.

NHS leaders should be strong and reward good work. They want GPs to help run hospitals and work with councils to keep people healthy.

The NHS should keep people well, not just treat sickness. It should use new medicines and tech to be ready for the future and be the best.

The Secretary said the team is good and hopeful. They want to make the NHS better. They thanked people and said there's more work to do.

The Secretary thinks the NHS can improve. They are excited and want everyone to work together to make it the best.
