

In Texas, a Stryker vehicle helps stop people crossing the US-Mexico border. It was once used in wars and is now part of a plan with 8,000 soldiers.

Some think there's too much military at the border. Soldiers can't be police, but new rules let them watch and catch until police arrive.

Fewer people are crossing the border. Some say the military isn't needed, but the government says it's important for safety and stopping drugs.

People in new defence areas face bigger punishments. Some charges dropped due to unclear signs, but military still watching the border.