

The Prime Minister and Lewis Hamilton met young people at 10 Downing Street to talk about helping kids do well in school.

The government wants to help kids enjoy learning and have more great teachers. They say it's important to listen to young people.

The Prime Minister knows school can be hard. He wants schools to help all kids be happy and confident.

Schools want to give kids free breakfast and better mental health help so all kids can do well, no matter how much money their family has.

The Prime Minister thanked Lewis and said young people's voices matter. He promised to consider their views when making big decisions.
