

People in Los Angeles are upset about immigration raids. These raids aim to send people without papers back to their countries.

The President sent soldiers to help with protests in Los Angeles. Some people are angry. The city does not work with immigration officers.

Many people were arrested in the raids. Some were not dangerous. Families are sad and worried. Some think the raids are not fair.

Some say rules must be followed, and those who break them should leave. Others say hard-working people should stay.

Protests have sometimes become violent. People got hurt, and things were broken. This has made many people in the country take notice.

Los Angeles has people from many countries. Protests show people don't agree on immigration rules.