

Cookies help websites work. GOV.UK uses them to remember choices. Some cookies share content. You can accept or reject extra cookies.

Sir Chris Bryant spoke about people in the UK who can't use the internet. Many lack digital skills or access, which makes life harder for them.

Kalpana learned to use the internet at a community centre. Now, she can find jobs and help her family with schoolwork online.

The UK government has a plan to help people get online. They will spend money to teach digital skills and give technology to those who need it.

Companies like Virgin Media O2 and BT help by offering free WiFi and cheaper internet for families.

Everyone should use the internet. It helps with jobs and staying connected. The government will work with businesses and communities to do this.