

Disabled People in the Pandemic

Four disabled people's organisations told the Covid inquiry that people receiving care were "ignored by design" during the pandemic. There were over.

Care homes became unsafe. Basic care was cut. Care workers spread the virus. The UK government took away rights from disabled people during COVID-19.

The government focused more on care homes than home care for protective gear and testing. Disabled people lost support and faced more COVID-19 risks.