

Driverless lorries are tested in China. They drive between cities but need a safety driver. This helps drivers feel less tired.

Trucks save money by not needing drivers for long hours. But people worry about safety after self-driving car accidents. Trust is important.

Driverless vans in Hefei deliver packages quickly. This tech might soon spread to places like Australia for deliveries.

Experts say big trucks might drive themselves in 5 years, but need better cameras and sensors. Safety is important to avoid mistakes.

Driverless tech is costly. Trucks are updated from old models. China aims to lead but must ensure safety and public approval.

Driverless trucks can make deliveries cheaper and faster. The technology must be very reliable to avoid mistakes.