

Gerard Butler felt like Belfast's "adopted son" while making a film. He loved the people and places, like Belfast and Dunseverick Castle.

The movie made over £59 million for Northern Ireland and gave jobs to 900 people. Gerard thinks the sequel should also be filmed there.

Gerard liked the film crew's work on the sets. Wearing a heavy costume for nine weeks helped him feel like Stoick. Locals were friendly.

Gerard had fun in Belfast. He went to a quiet pub, but it got busy when fans saw him. He laughed about it.

Other actors, like Nick Frost, loved Northern Ireland. Young stars Mason Thames and Nico Parker enjoyed filming despite the cold and liked the accent.