

The Royal Navy uses an underwater robot to keep cables safe. It finds and removes old bombs and can work deeper and longer than divers.

The robot is controlled from far away. It sends pictures to help with dangers. It saves money, supports jobs, and helps learn new skills.

Tests in Portsmouth and Norway help the Armed Forces stay safe. The robot protects the sea and workers, giving good value for money.