

The UK government plans to help farmers get fairer deals for crops like wheat and barley by reviewing unfair practices and making contracts fair.

The government is spending £5 billion to help local farmers. They want half of the food in public places to come from local farms.

A meeting will be held to hear from farmers. The review will work with local governments to make the supply chain fair for farmers and the public.